Summary and Other Accomplishments

Crary Myers was born and raised in Western New York State, where he began his musical journey on the alto saxophone at the age of ten. After feeling the pull of classic rock in junior high school, he began guitar lessons, but continued learning his way around woodwinds, including the entire saxophone family. By the end of high school, he had begun giving guitar lessons at the same music school where he had learned the fundamentals.

He has played professionally for over twenty years, appearing in amateur theatrical performances and working music groups. Through the years, Crary has formally taught guitar, saxophone, bass guitar, ukulele, and, banjo. He believes in two-prong approach to teaching: the first prong focused on music theory and reading music; secondly a more practical approach to learning and analyzing music, and, importantly, enjoyment. He fully believes that a working knowledge of music theory and application is not only important for those who intend to pursue music formally, but is rewarding for all and can be an integral component in a happy and fulfilled life.
